

8 The test

Writing my 8 articles about finding solutions to cure the climate has been rewarding as I now believe there is a way of doing it. Of course, to get this particular idea going many more would need to have similar thoughts.

What I think is needed is reaching people that can imagine an economic potential through the supply-chain. And see a role for themselves in the chain that stands on its own merits commercially. I can see a supply-chain formed by game developers, it-companies, carbon offset providers, material producers, land-, and space owners. With my earlier professional life in the software industry, it is natural to think that an (gaming) app should be a first solution.

Apart from reaching interested entrepreneurs I think they could do with some indication of how the ideas they have just stumbled on have been met by others. It could help if a measure of interest was available. As it happens, I have made such a measurement possible.

All articles can be reached on the web site www.climesave.com . Before the list of documents, I have added a counter that will show the number of mails sent to the mail address test@climesave.com Updating the number will be done at intervals.

Provided you have appreciated my articles – would you please do the following:

1. Press “share” on any or a few of my entries in LinkedIn or Facebook.
2. Send an email to the address test@climesave.com The content can be empty.
3. A positive comment will please the social media engine and give more exposure.

The counter will in time, as e-mails are received, show a measure of interest.

The articles have been posted on Facebook and LinkedIn with a few billion accounts so theoretically everyone that belongs to the wealthy population on the planet could be reached through the chain reaction of viral spread as a result of your active support.

In a positive scenario there are many mails for anyone to see. In this case the counter could present enough interest for some entrepreneurs to consider the ideas. If the interest is zero – well, I thank you for reading my long texts! 😊

Please share this article if you sympathize with the thoughts and post an email to test@climesave.com. A positive comment by the article and the spreading will go quicker.
